

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

When a host computer connected to a network is to remotely control information in an image processing apparatus, authentication to the image processing apparatus, authentication to the image processing apparatus is performed by using a password, and, on the basis of an encryption code of an encryption chip stored in the host computer, an authentication process for an operation with respect to the information in the image processing apparatus is performed by using a dictionary in an authentication server.